A grant is two jobs. Both land on someone who already has one.

Writing it is the first job. Keeping it after the award, with its reports, budget lines and match, is the second. GedDev takes the desk side of both.

GedDev prepares

- The fit check
- The narrative and budget
- Every report after the award
- A calendar of every date

You review, sign and submit

- From your own accounts
- You keep every funder relationship
- Your books, your program

Your first application is free

If you have not worked with GedDev before, the first application costs nothing. If it is not awarded, you owe nothing.

- ✓ Fit check and a short intake form
- ✓ Full narrative, budget and budget narrative
- ✓ Two revision rounds
- ✓ Final draft five business days before the deadline, when the intake is on time

You fill in the intake form, read the draft, and submit it from your own account.

> "The first one is free because I want you to see the work before you pay for any of it. Down the road, if you go after a larger grant, I hope I can help with that one too, and be paid for the desk side of administering it, written into that grant's budget."

After the free application, three paths. All of them are fine.

1. Just that, with my thanks.
   The application is yours. You owe nothing.

2. Grant administration, if it is awarded.
   GedDev keeps the award in good standing: the reports, the budget tracking, the payment requests. Usually paid from the award itself, where the funder allows it. Details in the fees sheet.

3. Ongoing services, by checking boxes.
   A grant watch, a giving page, a newsletter, Google Ad Grants, a volunteer portal. Pick any on a one-page agreement. Details in the services sheet.

How to start

Reply to any email from Seth. Name the grant you have in mind, or ask for one that fits, and the intake form comes back the same week.

No fee ever depends on winning. Never a percentage of an award.
